

The Montana State Fire Chiefs Association presents Jack Snook at the Fire Alliance Conference June 17-20. Check the agenda and register today!

www.montanafirechiefs.com

ESCI Presentations

Making the Pieces Fit Through Cooperative Efforts

As public funds diminish and competition and demands for existing local tax dollars increase many emergency services organizations are looking at alternatives. In many cases a viable option is to engage in cooperative service with neighboring jurisdictions. This dynamic and informative presentation will assist individuals and agencies in answering questions such as: Why cooperative service? What are the options? What are the short and long term benefits? What are the risks? Where would savings most likely occur? Are the savings significant? and many others.

Facing Forward – Moving On

Chief Jack Snook has spent years studying and working with people and their responses to extreme adversity, life and death situations, and coping with a significant event that either moved them in a positive direction or left them lost and struggling to cope or survive. He will talk candidly about the importance of “resilience” and how it can make or break an individual’s or organization’s spirit.

Chief Jack W. Snook (ret.), Tualatin Valley Fire and Rescue, OR. President/COO Emergency Services Consulting International

He is best known for his competitive spirit, a “can do” attitude, and extraordinary leadership abilities. His passion for helping others and making a difference elevated him from a rookie firefighter to the Fire Chief of one of the most successful Metro fire departments in the United States (TVF&R). Chief Snook’s presentations have made him “an audience favorite” for many years. He has opened or closed over 100 conferences and conventions and spoke at over 300 events. He keynoted the 1994 International Association of Fire Chiefs worldwide convention as well as national events for corporations such as Texaco and the U.S. Postal Service.